Dear Ravichandran, Aravind:

Please accept this as my official resignation letter. As you have been aware about the various personal challenges that I had been facing over the past couple of months, I increasingly found myself in need of some time to step back from my professional commitments to better focus on my future commitments both on my individual and family front. My journey under you has been phenomenal in terms of my professional growth. The domain knowledge that I ended up gaining over this period is mostly due to your effort in exposing me to the potential opportunities; mere words will not do any justice here, my humble gratitude to you. Also, I know you had attempted to employ various avenues in helping me navigate this precarious period in my life, such that I could figure out a middle ground for resuming back at work. Unfortunately, I will have to still go ahead with my plans for 2021, which I am afraid will not do justice for the goals of this team and the organization. Here's hoping that it is au revoir and not goodbye.

My last day at the firm could be any day post 18th December 2020 as you see appropriate. I would like to use this opportunity to thank the team here, who had helped me immensely all along during my tenure.

Sincerely,

S, Venkateshwaralu
